RCN/Radiate/Stonepeak Proposed Transfer of Control City of Boston

Michael Nilsson

HARRIS, WILTSHIRE & GRANNIS LLP

Counsel for Stonepeak

March 17, 2021

Introduction

- The proposed transaction involves an indirect transfer of control of RCN's parent company from one private equity fund to another.
- Applicants have submitted voluminous materials to Boston
- Rather than revisiting those materials, this presentation offers a very high-level summary of the effects of the proposed transaction on Boston and on RCN subscribers.

What the Proposed Transaction Means

- From Boston's perspective as franchise authority, the proposed transaction changes nothing at all.
- We do not propose to transfer the franchise. Rather, RCN will remain the franchisee and retain responsibility for compliance.
- This means that Boston can rely on RCN itself for legal and financial qualifications to operate a cable system.

What the Proposed Transaction Means

- In the short term, the proposed transaction will change nothing for Boston subscribers.
- Stonepeak chose this particular transaction because it believes that RCN's management and operations are excellent.
- Stonepeak has no plans to substantially change RCN's operations or management—including Tom Steel.
- This means that Boston can rely on RCN itself in terms of management and technical qualifications.

What the Proposed Transaction Means for Boston Subscribers in the Long Term

- The transaction promises to make additional resources available to RCN.
- Stonepeak manages $29 billion in investments and has a demonstrated history of providing resources to its portfolio companies and helping them grow.
- Additional resources may be used to improve the network, improve customer service, or otherwise enhance RCN's offerings.
- In the long term, the proposed transaction promises to make RCN's service more competitive with Comcast and other incumbents.

Audit and Review Process

- RCN participated in an audit and has agreed in principle to safeguards proposed by the auditor.
- As required by the franchise, RCN has paid for the City's expenses (up to $10,000) in reviewing and administering the proposed transfer.
